

KEYNOTE SPEAKERS

Hermann Funk is Full Professor of German-as-Foreign-Language at University of Jena. He was Dean of the Faculty of Philosophy (2011-2014) and President of the German Foreign Language Teacher Association (2009-2011). He is head of the advisory board of the German Government's International Schools and held teaching positions at University of Kassel, University of Leipzig (Herder Institute), University of Riga and Middlebury College, Vermont, USA.

He researches on German for professional purposes, design of learning media and focus-on-form, author of numerous German-Textbook-Series. His publications include Grammar in FL-classrooms, Quality Management of Language Teaching Materials (2010), German-as-a-foreign-language in professional contexts (2010,2011), FL-Teaching Methods (2012).

Agnes Kukulska-Hulme is Professor of Learning Technology and Communication in the Institute of Educational Technology at The Open University and Past-President of the International Association for Mobile Learning. Recently she has conducted research in the MASELTOV project on personalized technologies for social inclusion, the British Council project on Mobile Pedagogy for English Language Teaching, and the SALSA project on language learning in the next generation of smart cities.

She has published widely on mobile learning and is the co-editor of three leading books in this field, the latest of which is Mobile Learning: The Next Generation, published by Routledge.

Dr. Shinji Sato is the Director of the Japanese Language Programme at Princeton University. He completed his Ph.D. in anthropology and education from Teachers College, Columbia University. His works critically examine self-evident notions in Japanese language education including learning, culture, communication, competence, and creativity. He also proposes alternative classroom practices.

Sato is the co-author of several publications, including Rethinking Language and Culture in Japanese Education (2014), Syakaisanka o mezasu nihongo kyoiku [Japanese Language Education for the Global Citizens] (2012), and Mirai o tsukuru kotoba no kyoiku o mezashite

[Language Education for Social Future: Critical Content-Based Instruction] (CCBI, 2015).

Professor Glenn Stockwell (Ph.D., University of Queensland) is Professor at Waseda University, Tokyo, Japan. His research interests include designing language learning environments through technology, motivation in language teaching and learning, mobile learning, and the development of learner autonomy. He is the author of two books on Computer Assisted Language Learning, and has also published numerous book chapters and articles in the field.

He is Editor-in-Chief of The JALT CALL Journal, Associate Editor of Computer Assisted Language Learning, Language Learning & Technology, and is on the editorial boards of ReCALL, System and CALICO Journal.