

Workshop on Implementation Research for Social Services (February 2020)

Course Outline

This 2-day workshop on implementation research introduces participants to the emerging field of implementation science – the theories, concepts, and methods, and its relevance to the social service sector.

Implementation research can consider any aspect of implementation, for example, the factors influencing implementation, the processes of implementation, and the outcomes of implementation, including how to disseminate and scale up a programme, a policy or an intervention. The intent of the research seeks to understand what, why, and how programmes, policies or interventions work in real world settings and to work towards improving them.

Participants will be equipped with knowledge and skills to conceptualise a research to study the design and implementation of a programme, a policy or an intervention.

The course is integrated into the workshops under SSR's "Mentoring on Implementation Research for Social Services".

Topics covered:

- Developments of implementation science and its relevance to social services
- Theory-driven approach for programme design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation
- Theories and concepts of implementation research and how they can be applied in practice
- Implementation fidelity and adaptation in implementation research
- Research methods and data analysis
