

Participatory Research for Social Services (31 January 2024)

Programme Description:

This course provides an overview of participatory research designs and methods that can be applied to social and community services. Participatory research is distinct from other research approaches in its focus on engaging service users and ordinary people to be actively involved in decisions that shape the research or services that affect them. People's participation in decision-making processes allows them the opportunities not only to voice their views, but also to have those views considered and incorporated into research and service designs. Participatory approaches place all stakeholders on level-playing ground and encourages users, service providers, researchers, policy-makers and other members to collaborate, share and co-own research that provides more effective solutions and services for users.

Programme Objectives:

- Understand the principles, values and rationales behind participatory research.
- Understand the different participatory research designs and methods, as well as their strengths and limitations.
- Suggest ways to carry out participatory research for social services.

All course participants are expected to contribute to group discussions and presentations during the workshop.

Programme Schedule:

- 31 January 2024, 9:00 am – 6:00 pm

The workshop will be conducted in-person at the NUS Kent Ridge Campus (The Shaw Foundation Building, Block AS7). Participants will be informed of the venue after their registration is confirmed.
