[RnGTraineeship] Research Apprentice Position

ID: 66457

Job Description
We are looking for a research apprentice / trainee to actively participate in two ongoing research projects led by Associate Professor Bussarawan Teerawichitchainan. The projects address major challenges of population aging and the well-being of older persons in Southeast Asia using innovative research methods. Specifically, the first project, the Vietnam Health and Aging Study (VHAS), is an international, inter-disciplinary collaboration that investigates social and biomedical mechanisms of the association between diverse exposures to trauma and armed conflicts and multiple dimensions of health among older Vietnamese. The second project, Childless Aging in Singapore and Thailand, examines the demographics of childless older populations, pathways to childlessness, and the well-being of childless older persons using both quantitative and qualitative research approaches. Duration of hire is up to 9 months.

Responsibilities
The research apprentice / trainee will assist PI with literature review, data analysis and management for the projects; assist PI with administrative coordination for the projects; is expected to work independently and collaboratively with other team members; and to do any other ad-hoc duties as assigned.

Qualifications
We are looking for a trainee with the following:
• Degree in the Social Sciences, Health Sciences, or Statistics;
• Working knowledge of SPSS and/or STATA is preferred
• Effective oral and written communication skills
